A core facility nobody asked for, and why it was not an exit from research

Running a technology platform is often described as the exit from research. It does not have to be. How do you build a facility nobody asked for, keep it funded, and end up with a research group? Six years condensed into the decisions that mattered.

Jobs behind the academic scenes

Have you ever wondered who keeps academia running behind the scenes? Many graduates know little about the varied careers within academic institutions. Fanny highlights roles in the “third space,” where academic and professional work intersect. Moving beyond traditional faculty and administrative categories, she explores the skills, career paths, and perspectives these roles bring to the education, research and innovation sector.
